ANTI-WILD CAT LAW.

The bill passed by the members of the legislature, known as the anti-wild cat bill, in one of the best measures enacted into law during the late session. The Goldfield News takes up the subject and treats it very intelligently in the following: "This legislation, which was passed by the just ended session of the legislature of the state of Nevada comes as a direct response to the demand for some method by which mine operation and promotion shall be placed upon a basis which gives the stockholders full knowledge of just what is going on, condition and true worth of properties, receipt and expenditure of monies and condition of treasuries of the companies in which they are interested. In other words, it is legislation which is designed to make stockholders, promoters and operators partners in the full and true meaning of the term, and which makes it impossible for unscrupulous promoters to obtain the money of the investing public upon representation that such money is to be used in either mining developed prospects or in prospecting, or any of the legitimate investments connected with mining and then, under cover of the secrecy which the laws of the state have heretofore permitted, squander or pocket this money which is placed with the promoter in trust, and with no means of legal redress for the investor.

"Although the state of Nevada is rapidly coming to the front as the greatest gold, silver and lead producing section of the Union and its possibilities have not as yet begun to be realized even by Nevadans, illegitimate promotions during the past decade have taken millions of dollars from the public. Heretofore, the laxity of the laws of the state relative to the protection of its one great industry has been such that the investor has had absolutely no way of ascertaining the merit of any Nevada mining proposition which has been brought to his notice, save that he personally traveled to the location of the property concerned, or hired an expert to look it over. These two methods of securing information have been too expensive for the average investor. Consequently, he has invested his money "sight unseen" in a amount proportionate to the smoothness of his literature; has been "stung" and "stung" again, and now has not the courage for further investment along this line save where he has personal knowledge of the merits of a proposition or can depend upon the personal knowledge of some tried friend.

"It is this withdrawal of confidence and absence of legal protection which was largely responsible for the hardship which the man developing legitimate mines in Nevada has suffered during the past two years. True, the general financial stringency added to this embarrassment of the mining industry in Nevada, but had confidence in Nevada investments been maintained through wholly honest promotion and development, and by legal protection to investors, the financial stringency would hardly have been felt in the state.

"Fearless and undiscriminatory enforcement of the new protective law will, we confidently believe, result in rehabilitating the mining industry in Nevada. The man and combines individual and collectively controlling huge combinations of capital have never for a moment lost confidence in Nevada; for they have been able to gain full knowledge of everything pertaining to the properties which they have taken up before they began development. A few thousands more or less spent in investigating a property has been but a drop in the bucket for them, inconsequential. And due to them Nevada is now in a period of actual production which is almost unbelievable. These people, however, do not extend such a general development to the state as do the thousands of small investors who, associating themselves together as stockholders, develop smaller, independent properties in all sections of the state where experienced prospectors have found rich mineral deposits but lack the means for development of mines. It is these investors whom the new law will protect, and protecting, will induce an inpour of money which will result most rapidly in the full development of the mineral resources of Nevada.

"The new law provides for semi-annual reports by each mining company doing business in the state, these reports covering not only the actual property of each company, but what has been done on it during the six months prior to the report; exact accounting of monies received and expended from any source and in any manner; exact condition of treasuries; stock reserves and issues and monies derived from such, and lastly, such recording of stock that at any time any stockholder may know the exact status of the company in which he is interested.
